Ferocious 'devil winds' whip up deadly California fires

At least 23 people have been killed by perhaps the state's worst forest fire.

Two deadly wildfires fueled by "devil winds" tore through opposite ends of California on Sunday, with residents urged to heed evacuation orders by officials forced to leave their own homes.

In northern California, the Camp Fire is one of the deadliest and most destructive in the state's history, killing at least 23 since it broke out on Thursday northeast of Sacramento and consumed much of the mountain town of Paradise. More than 100 were reported missing.

Hundreds of miles to the south, at least two people died in the Woolsey conflagration threatening the wealthy beach community of Malibu, near Los Angeles.

Looting was reported in the southern fire area and arrests were made, police reported.

Hot, dry winds expected to blow until Tuesday whipped up the flames and heightened the urgency of evacuation orders, officials said.

"We are entering a new normal. The rate of spread is exponentially more than it used to be," said Ventura County Fire Chief Mark Lorenzen, noting at a press conference that California's fires in 2018 grow far more quickly than they did even 10 years ago.

Several officials urged residents to heed evacuation orders, noting they themselves had followed orders to leave their homes for safety.

"Winds are already blowing. They are going to blow for the next three days. Your house can be rebuilt but you can't bring your life back," said Chief Daryl Osby of the Los Angeles County Fire Department.

Crews pushed forward to achieve 25 percent containment of the Camp Fire in northern California, which had burned 109,000 acres at the edge of the Plumas National Forest, according to Cal Fire's website. In Southern California, where the Woolsey Fire scorched 83,275 acres, the blaze was only 10 percent contained.

The Camp Fire burned down more than 6,700 homes and businesses in Paradise, more structures than any other California wildfire on record, and the death toll, which could rise, also makes it one of the deadliest.

Only the Griffith Park

Fire in 1933 and Tunnel Fire in 1991 have claimed more lives.

Several of the bodies discovered earlier this week were found in or near burned-out cars, police have said. The flames descended on Paradise so fast that many people were forced to abandon their vehicles and run for their lives down the only road through the mountain town.

More than 110 people were reported missing in the fire-scorched area.

Winds of up to 40 miles per hour were forecast to blow in the north and gusts of up to 70 mph, the so-called Santa Ana "devil winds," were expected in Southern California.

The Woolsey Fire doubled in size from Friday night into Sunday, threatening thousands of homes after triggering mandatory evacuation orders for a quarter-million people in the upscale beach city as well as other communities in Los Angeles and Ventura counties. REUTERS

HERNANDEZ CONVICTION REINSTATEMENT SOUGHT

2 The Supreme Judicial Court in Massachusetts has started a review of a state legal principle that wiped out the murder conviction of former New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez after his suicide. On Thursday, the justices heard arguments from prosecutors as to why convictions shouldn't be erased if those found guilty die before an appellate court has reviewed facts of the trial. Hernandez was convicted on April 15, 2015, of the 2013 death of semi-pro football player Odin Lloyd in North Attleborough. The 27-year-old Hernandez was found dead in his prison cell on April 19, 2017, with his death ruled a suicide. He had been sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. The state's highest court in 2016 refused to change the legal rule in connection with another case, but the Hernandez prosecutors have taken up the cause. Attorney General Maura Healey is supporting the effort of Bristol District Attorney Thomas M. Quinn III, who is seeking to have Hernandez's conviction reinstated. "The current practice ... does not consider the interest of the other parties who have an interest in the outcome," said Quinn.

POLAND MARCH MARKS 100 YEARS OF INDEPENDENCE

3 Poland's eurosceptic leaders marked a century of national independence on Sunday as more than 200,000 people marched through the capital in a parade involving far-right groups and neo-fascist activists from Italy. The march is a focus of debate about whether the ruling Law and Justice Party (PiS) tacitly encourages groups with roots in the fascist and anti-Semitic movements. The party won power in 2015 and Poland has since become increasingly isolated in Europe amid accusations of a tilt toward authoritarian rule. Some marchers in Warsaw chanted

"Away with the EU" but there was no sign of white supremacist banners visible at last year's march. Government officials walked at a distance from the main marchers, away from any overt displays of nationalism, and they were kept separate by security forces. "Thank you for coming here, for Poland, and for bringing the white and red [Polish] flag which saw our fathers, grandfathers and great-grandfathers spill their blood," President Andrzej Duda, a PiS ally, said at the start of the march. "There is space for everyone under our flags," he said.

SCOTT ASKS THAT BALLOTS BE GUARDED IN RECOUNT

4 Florida Gov. Rick Scott, whose lead has narrowed in the state's U.S. Senate race, filed more lawsuits against local election officials on Sunday, asking a judge to order police to impound voting machines and ballots when they are not in use. On Saturday, a machine recount began in the race between Scott and incumbent Democratic U.S. Sen. Bill Nelson in one of the most closely watched swing-state contests in last Tuesday's congressional elections. By the time the recount was ordered, Scott's lead had shrunk to 12,500 votes, or 0.15 percent, below the threshold under which a machine recount is automatically triggered under state law. Each side has accused the other of trying to subvert democracy in an echo of the drama in the 2000 presidential vote recount that unfolded for weeks in Florida. Another recount was also triggered in the gubernatorial race between Ron DeSantis and Andrew Gillum as DeSantis' lead shrank to 33,700 votes, or 0.41 percent, as of Saturday. Susan Bucher, the Palm Beach County elections supervisor, told CNN on Sunday that it would be "impossible" for the county to meet the Thursday race recount deadline.

How Pine Street Inn helps homeless vets find community

On Veterans Day and beyond, Pine Street Inn helps local vets get back on their feet.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

In his effort to end homelessness, Mayor Marty Walsh has paid special attention to the issue of veteran homelessness — and for good reason. Across the country, veterans are overrepresented in the homeless population, with studies showing that they're twice as likely as civilians to become homeless.

In 2016, Walsh announced that Boston ended chronic veteran homelessness, but that doesn't mean there aren't any more vets sleeping in shelters across the city.

Hartford Street House, transitional housing for homeless veterans by Pine Street Inn.

PROVIDED BY PINE STREET INN

Kathy Conley, director of Pine Street Inn veterans programs, was a part of that city effort. "Chronic," she explained, means they've been on the street or in a shelter for at least 12 consecutive months or have had four episodes of homelessness in a three-year period.

"I think we did a really good job getting chronic veterans housed, and now we're working on non-chronic," she said. "It's the same pool of people, they've just been living on the streets less."

At Hartford Street House, Pine Street Inn's just-for-veterans transitional house in Dorchester, the wide array of veteran homelessness is clear. The youngest veteran Conley has worked with was 22, the oldest 84. She's worked with vets from all branches of the armed forces and from different wars, including Vietnam, Iran, Afghanistan and even peacetime vets.

"We have to do some research and learn about what they experienced, where they came from, but they share with us also," she said. "The beauty of the program being solely for veterans is they can relate to each other. They have a fellowship and support each other."

That connection is key, and sometimes, Conley said, why vets aren't always completely comfortable when they get housing and live on their own.

"There honestly is a sense of camaraderie on the streets ... to get into housing can be somewhat isolating," she said. "You go from being around a couple hundred people to all of a sudden looking at four walls."

"The beauty of the program being solely for veterans is they can relate to each other. They have a fellowship and support each other."

Kathy Conley, director of Pine Street Inn veterans programs

That's why Pine Street offers aftercare as well, to maintain a connection with vets and continue to help with the issues that may have contributed to their homelessness, like mental health and substance abuse, PTSD, legal barriers to work or housing and, often, credit issues.

To date, Boston has housed more than 850 homeless veterans. Nationally, the number of homeless veterans has dropped 5.4 percent over the past year, according to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

But veteran homelessness has actually increased in Massachusetts. Though it's declined more than 21 percent since 2013, it's increased 15 percent from 2017 to 2018, according to HUD data out this month.

Conley thinks she knows why: "There's no affordable housing here," she said.

Boston has resources for homeless veterans, but as one of the most expensive real estate markets in the nation, it's hard for vets to find an affordable one-bedroom apartment here, even with HUD veterans affairs vouchers.

Often, that means that after getting help in Boston, vets have to move outside of the city, like to Fall River, New Bedford or on the North Shore. Moving away for a more stable housing situation can then break those connections veterans made in Boston, isolating them again.

But Pine Street is still there for them, Conley said. For Veterans Day, Pine Street is hosting multiple events to get homeless and housed veterans together, like special luncheons and a donated Italian dinner night.

Events extend throughout the week, and they build on the work the organization already does to acknowledge these veterans.

"Society sets aside one day a year for them, but we really try to do it every day," said Conley. "They say, 'Thanks so much for what you're doing for us,' and we say, 'You deserve it.' It takes them back because they don't hear it all the time."

TD Garden gets a $100 million upgrade

The home of the Bruins and Celtics is getting a major facelift.

matthew.juul@metro.us

The TD Garden is getting a "legendary transformation." Delaware North, the owners and operators of the arena, announced on Friday morning that a new $100 million investment will provide an expansive renovation, featuring the addition of 50,000 square feet to the venue, as well as new amenities and experiences for fans over the course of the next two years. Here's everything you need to know about the TD Garden renovation.

What's new for fans?
The first things fans will notice about the upgraded arena is the completion of The Hub on Causeway, a 1.5 million square-foot space that sits in front of the TD Garden, atop the grounds of the old Boston Garden. Created in conjunction with Boston Properties, The Hub on Causeway features a new "front door," an atrium entrance with a glass canopy, plus new escalators and elevators to bring fans to the building's second floor. The entrance will officially open Dec. 1.

Aside from the new front door, the TD Garden is adding more space to its loge and balcony areas, which will feature a "rotating calendar of pop-up concession stands," according to a press release. Fans will also get the chance to cheer on their favorite teams at the new Back Row Bar on level 8. The bar will have an additional 50 seats and provide "vintage vibes."

Even bigger changes are in store for members of the Premium Club, which is being rebranded as the Boston

Garden Society. Members will be able to enjoy a host of new luxury amenities in the arena, as well as a "street-to-seat experience," such as new private entrances and elevators.

Boston Garden Society members will have plenty of places to eat, drink and play, including the new eateries and bars Society Kitchen & Tap on level five and the 1928 Club on levels five and six. A party deck dubbed the Rafters will also allow members to enjoy games from the top floor of the arena.

What's new for commuters?

Fans who take the T to games will have a new pedestrian tunnel below Causeway Street, which connects North Station's subway stop with the commuter rail. The tunnel will open sometime in December. Those who drive to the TD Garden should already notice the expanded North Station Garage, which now has 500 new parking spots.

What's new for the players?

The TD Garden renovation didn't forget the players, who'll get to enjoy new team locker rooms beginning in the 2019-2020 season.

MentorcliQ hopes to combat the downsides of being a remote employee.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Many of us long for a day where we're doing well enough professionally to ditch the office life and work from home every day.

But as a significant amount of people around the world setting up remote office are discovering, without the office culture and day-to-day interactions with co-workers, working from home can lead to increased depression and anxiety for some workers.

By offering counseling via Skype or phone, remote-counseling company MentorcliQ aims to give remote workers the mentoring and social experiences they're missing out on by not commuting to an office every day. We spoke with Paul McCartney, chief learning officer at MentorcliQ, about how employee mentorship can combat loneliness among remote workers.

It seems as though more people these days want to work remotely. But what some people might not understand is the loneliness and isolation that can bring. What first alerted you to this phenomenon?

It's interesting, because a recent Gallup poll showed that 43 percent of the workforce in the United States works out of the office at least part of the time. That number is up a whole lot. Ten years ago, I was in a role where I was traveling a lot for work internationally. I could be in three different continents in four weeks. You had to do that because that's how you built the relationships and the face time and all of those kinds of things. With the advent of the technology that we are all now familiar with, it really has shifted the very nature of work, and we're all experiencing that. Using myself as an example, 10 years ago, I would be traveling up to 50 percent of the time. Now I have two domiciles and one of my domiciles sits in the same city as our corporate headquarters. I find that, even when I'm in that same city and I'm 1.1 miles away from the corporate office, I still work from home a couple days a week!

The reason we all leverage that trend of being able to work remotely is because you can get more stuff done. There's a benefit of being able to work remotely, and that's why a lot of people are doing. The downside that we are all experiencing, is that it is a different dynamic. It's not the same if you don't have the face time. You do have to offset some of those downsides of working remotely either full-time or part-time. We became aware of it with the rest of the U.S. and global workforce, and have definitely seen the mentoring aspect and mentoring automation as a significant way to offset that.

What kinds of counseling does MentorcliQ offer to people who feel lost while working from home?

In talking about this phenomenon, I start with a real definition of the problem. One definition of the problem, from a mentoring perspective, is when you are working in a remote work environment that "water cooler" is not there. The phrase that I use when talking about it is that "in the absence of happenstance, you need to create circumstance." By that I mean those water cooler conversations are happenstance. It may be you're walking down the hall and you bump into someone and you strike up a conversation. But that happenstance creates the opportunity for either a business conversation or a relationship development.

When that happen-

stance isn't there, organizations are well-served to become more explicit about it and create the circumstances for those interactions to happen. The mentoring relationship is one of the most perfect ways to do that. When you think about the relationships that are had in the workplace, the vast majority of those relationships are there because they ensure to the benefit of the organization. Your boss, your colleagues, all of those relationships are there for the benefit of the company. The one exception you could say is human resources. With that said, that relationship is 50 percent or greater for the benefit of the company, whereas with the mentoring relationship, there is a benefit to the company, no doubt about it, but at the core of that relationship is the mentee. The mentee is there for their progression through the organization. It is uniquely one of those relationships that is there for the employee and participant in the program. So between the fact that mentoring makes explicit and promotes the idea of having a relationship that is not just work-oriented, it creates and drives a relationship where an individual can become more connected to their colleagues and thus also back to the organization that is sponsoring the mentoring program.

Pats annihilated in Tennessee

The Patriots were slammed by the Titans, 34-10.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

For the second time this season, the ex-Patriots got the best of the 2018 Patriots.

As Matt Patricia and the Detroit Lions did in September, Mike Vrabel and the Titans (5-4) did on Sunday — completely dominating Bill Belichick and the Pats. This time, the Patriots fell 34-10 as their record dropped to 7-3 on the season.

All three of the Patriots' losses this season have come on the road.

Here are three things we learned on Sunday in Nashville.

Missing Gronk

You had a hunch going into the game that Vrabel was going to put the pressure on Tom Brady all afternoon. The Titans coach certainly did that as Brady looked like Drew Bledsoe in the pocket at times, displaying happy feet and also patting the ball with nowhere to throw to. The Titans sacked Brady three times and hit him three times as well.

It's easy to tell early on in most games whether or not Brady is going to have a tough day. But typically, he has a security blanket when things aren't going as planned to bail him out.

Noted security blanket Rob Gronkowski missed his third game in the past four weeks on Sunday due to back and ankle injuries. Gronk likely would have played if it were a playoff game or a must-win for the Pats, but Brady certainly could have used him Sunday against a tough Titans defense. Brady was forced to throw to third-string tight end Jacob Hollister at key moments in the second half, and Josh McDaniels even used Brady as a receiver on one sloppy trick play.

For sure, the Pats were in desperation mode on offense without No. 87.

Blame for Brady

Belichick often says, "There's no quarterback I'd rather have than Tom Brady." Right now, that would be a lie.

Brady is still an elite quarterback in the league for sure, but there have been signs of slippage this season and these were encapsulated on Sunday. Brady completed a season-low 51.2 percent of his passes against Tennessee. It was his lowest completion percentage in a game since that opening-night blowout loss to the Chiefs a season ago.

Brady did not throw a touchdown pass Sunday and earned a 70.6 passer rating, his lowest since he registered a 65.1 in the loss to the Lions earlier this year.

He has just three games this season in which he's thrown for over 300 yards, and also has just three games this season where he's passed for three or more touchdowns.

A big stat for Brady has always been number of completions in a game, and last year during the regular season, he had five games in which he completed 30 or more passes. This season, he has hit the magic 30 spot just once — 34, against the Colts in early October.

Step back for 'D'

The Patriots defense solved Aaron Rodgers pretty easily eight days ago, but the unit looked befuddled against the Titans offense from the get-go.

Tennessee put up 17 points in the first quarter on Sunday and the Pats could never recover. Stephon Gilmore was flagged for clutching and grabbing time and again, and their overall rush defense was mighty weak.

Derrick Henry, Dion Lewis, David Fluellen and quarterback Marcus Mariota rushed for a combined 150 yards on 36 carries and two touchdowns.

A direct snap to Henry in the red zone in the fourth quarter was the lowlight on a day of lowlights for the Pats defense, as Henry jogged into the end zone from 10 yards out, untouched, for a touchdown.
